Julia says

I haven't gotten much novel reading done this month because I've been gorging myself on how-to gardening books from the public library (and putting them into practice). This is probably my favorite so far -- lots of great tips on individual plant care and also garden design.

Tráese says

If you love to cook you gotta get your hands on this rockin' book!

-bon appetit

Sara says

...i'm absolutely giddy thinking about next year's raised beds now! simply cannot wait to begin our veggie and herb garden...

Deb says

Another fun book from the cooks at Moosewood. It also includes a great section on herbs and gardening.

Sarah says

This book got me really excited. I really like the garden layouts they have AND the descriptions of the herbs and the edible flowers. Violets and roses are edible! That's pretty amazing. They aren't just pretty to look at!

Cherie says

A This book made me so jealous of those who have gardens. Even if you don't own a garden, it still teaches you a lot about eating, cooking, and local gardening. A lot of yummy recipes in the book, along with tons of great recipe tips. I love Moosewood. I really want to visit it and eat their yummilicious food!

Frank says

this will show you how to create a garden in any environment-from a pot of oregano on your windowsill, to building your own greenhouse.

Karen says

Lots of great info about food gardening, even with some less conventional plants and herbs. Good recipes, too. This was a good addition to my gardening reference collection, filling in some gaps left by other books.

Robin says

As a somewhat lazy urban gardener w/ small plot who likes to pick what she needs from her yard and add it to maybe not so local stuff, it's very helpful and inspiring. I have grown and eaten things I never thought I would.
