Tweety says

What fun! And quite unexpected!

Ririn says

3.5 stars

A very funny yet at the same time very romantic tale :-D

I would give more stars if the heroin's character was a little deeper to recommend her than just a pretty face and youthfulness. I just can't accept a suave lord to fall in love and decided to marry a young lady for her prettiness. And this is why I preffered Ms Heyer's older and more matured heroines (except Kitty and Freddy in Cotillion, love them very much! :-D)

I have swooned. It is a delightful and charming short story. An essence of Heyer's wit and charm. It is an injection for improving humor.

It was published first in newspapers and today you can read it in public domain, for example on the website of National Library of Australia. Here are links to adequate pages of newspaper (which contain this short story): (1), (2), (3), and (4).

Beth says

A lovely little Regency short story with Heyer's deft touch. Source is scanned online copy of 1937 Australian newspaper complete with vintage ads.

Phil Syphe says

Quite an entertaining short story, this one.

I seem to be one of few of Ms Heyer's male readers, but I think that in general she creates some great characters with humorous dialogue exchanges, like in this tale, which is good enough for me, despite her target audience being a female one.
