Part one. No pretentious exclamation points. I'm thrilled. I'm also surprised. How I remember this zit episode is beyond me. Haven't seen it in years.

Part two: This one, i think, was on reruns often. No pretentious exclamation points, but it is a bit head scratching to see on page 67 (in part two, no less) that Miley Stuart is secretly Hannah Montana. While it is common to see reminders of book one in a second book, it is odd to see it this far into the story.

Also, in chapter four of part two, why is the scene with Jackson and the dad so short. This was easily a longer scene in the episode. Surely it deserved more than one and a half paragraphs.

Still takes me back, though.

When Hannah Montana becomes the face of Magic Glow skin cream, Miley doesn't relise it will mean appearing on a huge billboard with a pimple the size of an extra-large pizza! Will Miley remember that it's what is inside that counts, or will she let her inner diva take control?

I liked this Hannah Montana book b/c i t tells you that there's always going to be someone in life who will help you get through tough stuff, and this particular book Face off is when Miley and Lilly get into a fight, and then go back to being friends, so it's a great expierance! Well to me anyways!

I remember when I watched this episode.

I laughed my a$$ off! Why? Because Miley a.k.a. Hannah is killing me! She was trying really really reeeeeeally hard to cover her zit when her face's already on the huge billboard that ready to go public and still, eventually her dad caught her. Fun!

Very awesome series.
