William H. Bassett says

Such a richness of expression!

The precision and depth with which the major characters are examined with regard to the conflicting claims upon them, by others and by their own moral and emotional imperatives, I found to be very satisfying. I would commend this book to any aspiring actor or writer.

1 (novel): Adam Bede. Started 2015-12-10, finished 2016-01-09. 3 stars.

Fairly slow-paced, and somewhat predictable. Most characters are well drawn, but the woman preacher, who figures prominently, is rather two-dimensional. The author has a tendency to dwell at length on minute details that do not move the story forward. Since this was her first book, I'm expecting better from the rest.

2 (short story): The Lifted Veil. 2016-01-10. 2 stars

Somewhat interesting but depressing.

3 (novel): The Mill on the Floss. Started 2016-01-11, finished 2016-02-08. 2.5 stars.

Pro: The characters are drawn with deep understanding of human nature and the countryside they inhabit.

Con: The author persists, to the end, in throwing insuperable obstacles at the characters, finally painting the story into a corner from which there is no escape.

4 (short novel): Silas Marner. Read and reviewed previously. 4 stars.

5 (novel): Ramona. Started 2016-02-08

Robert Robertson says

I have now read all the George Eliot novels. I enjoyed them all although the writing is of its time and rather overblown.

My favourites were Middlemarch and Mill on the Floss. I found Ramola the least convincing.

Sheila says

Come for the story, stay for the writing

Middlemarch is, as is often said, the masterwork of the collection, but I loved them all. What a great study of human behavior in both its beauty and its imperfection.
