As a prestigious F-16 fighter pilot, Captain Kate Cardenas grew disillusioned with the endless harassment and sexism by her colleagues in the US Air Force. Now she faces even greater challenges as a secret operative for the Defense Intelligence Agency stationed in the south of France.

Her latest mission? The covert rescue of Hank Cullen, CEO of Cullen Industries-a key American military vendor kidnapped by terrorists outside of Paris. He also happens to be the half-brother of special ops combatant Major Ben Cullen, an old friend of Kate's from her Air Force Academy days.

Joining forces with French detectives and special ops, Kate and the DIA race against time to rescue Hank before it's too late-a pursuit that will lead them into the territory of some dangerous extremists and will act as the catalyst for an earth-shattering series of events.

Fast-paced and riveting from beginning to end, "Window of Exposure" invites readers into the close-knit, secretive world of military operations in an international thriller that explores modern-day terrorism through the efforts of an unforgettable female heroine.

This book is wonderful! I really enjoy a book that I can't put down when reading. Kate is an awesome women and handles all situations she gets into with her high intelligence. The ending of the book really had me holding on to me chair.

It just to happened that this book specifically was my chosen companion in a busy A&E lounge, and I was so happy in the end that I picked it specifically to keep me company! The thing is that I am really a sucker for strong female leads that are also realistic, and on that note this lovely bookish creation definitely did not disappoint. Not only is the main female protagonist enjoyable, what I also liked here is how nicely the exposition is woven into the story, you notice it is not distracting and it helps you to enjoy the story ride. It kept me entertained and is a great read if you are longing for a bit of reality escapism in your day.
