Portrait of a Fallen Angel: Apocalypse Generation Raoul Hawkins

Portrait of a Fallen Angel is a black comedy that explores the darker side of innocence. When Frank Walker gains notoriety as the Devil-worshipping prophet of a new religion, he naively believes he can control the beast he has unleashed.

"The messiah is coming?" he exhorts his followers, but when the messiah really does turn up, all Hell is set to break loose.

Didn't liked the end that much, seemed a little rushed and inconclusive to me. Otherwise a great light read. Praise the devil!

Bronwen Algat says

Really enjoyed this fast paced novel. I guess you could place it in the uniquely Australian Gothic tradition but seriously....'out there'. Hilariously funny yet scarily grotesque. Found this a hugely entertaining, dark and lascivious romp through the perils of messianic fanaticism and all its biting parallels with the pitfalls and weirdness of 21st Century life. Not for the faint hearted but quirky thread together with jazz, funk, a dead trombonist and a cast of colourful and wacky characters. The breathtaking conclusion has all the echoes of a Greek Tragedy on an epic scale. Any film-makers out there game to turn this novel into a black cult comedy of obscene ambition? Go on.....dare you....
