I read this before, but it was well worth reading again!

16 year old Trisha has just won her first race as a jockey. Her father, owner of the horse, had been able to be at the track for the race & the winner's circle, but her mother had to take him back to the hospital where he's being treated for lung cancer immediately afterward. Trisha didn't get to say goodbye because of all her school friends congratulating her! Another owner asked her to ride for him during the week, she told him that she couldn't ride during school, but agreed to ride after school without asking her parents...oops!

Tricia starts to race a lot and gets more experienced. But as she spends more time with horses, she spends less time studying, and her grades get lower. She is still worried about her father's health. Tricia is comforted by a song about eagles wings, and hopes she will have eagles wings on her next race with Spitfire.

I enjoyed this series very much. A girl who lives on a horse farm in Oregon wants to be a jockey. Finally, her dream is coming true. Just as it has come true, her father dies of cancer. After this, she learns to cope with his death by turning to God. The one thing I did not appreciate about this book was the whole boyfriend/girlfriend thing throughout the series. But, overall, I definitely enjoyed them.

Rena Sherwood says

The Golden Filly series by Snelling is a terrible series that is best left avoided. The golden filly still has not appeared in this book. This one is better at character development and is "horsier" than the previous book.

Although marketed as a clone of the popular Thoroughbred series, Snelling's horsey series is nothing more than preaching about Christianity. I was a Christian for about 18 years and can say that the information about living as a Christian presented in the series is unrealistic at best and blatantly wrong at worst.

The series shows a distinct lack of equine knowledge, which I found even more disturbing than the preaching. And what's with the constant mention of Diet Coke?

That being said, Eagle's Wings was the best book in the series (I stopped at book 5 or 6.) This particular book was the most fun to read and perhaps (if my memory is right and I don't feel like reading it again to be sure. The best character is the black colt. All the people you really wish would turn into horses at some point. At least horses don't talk so much shit.

I love the humanity of Tricia. She has struggles and mistakes and is definitely not perfect. In this book, she makes some really big mistakes like racing for other stables without her parents permission. She is also having trouble with chemistry at school. The book was interesting, realistic, and packed with excellent writing that I can always count on when it comes to Lauraine Snelling. A great Christian and horse book.

What a great book in a great series. I especially love that Trish enjoys the song Eagle's Wings as I've always loved singing it in church. I also appreciate that she views it as more than a funeral song.
