Mikaela says

Oh no! Kuroko's presence is known. Tsk! And that guy, Mayuzumi Chihiro.. he's just like Kuroko! O_O omg! Hahaha Furihata though XD even though he isn't that skilled yet, he's actually reliable. Even if he doesn't believe so. The other 1st years played too. Damn.

"Seirin" is losing. The gap in scores are getting too far apart. 25 points difference? Shiit. Will "Seirin" be able to catch up to "Rakuzan"'s score? :O They really need Kuroko. They have to think of a plan quick.

WHY?!?!

Sophie says

This volume gets three stars only rather than the usual five because of Hyuuga's unbearable homophobia and sexism. I had heard about it on tumblr before and tbh I thought people were exaggerating or the translation was to blame, but that really isn't the case. I am just grateful it was Hyuuga and not Kagami, for example, since it turned a character I liked into one I now dislike and who I find it hard to root for. For what it's worth, it doesn't read like Hyuuga's attitude is supposed to be commendable, but the simple fact that a character like Leo is in THE number one enemy team and not, say, in Kaijou or Shuutoku, does leave a bitter taste in my mouth.

I really enjoy reading this basketball manga. Great match storylines. A lot of strong opponents with good background.

C'è sempre questo gioco al massacro sull'ultima partita (sulle ultime due, in realtà) di KuroBas, perché non era giusto che la Seirin vincessesse, perché la Kaijou se lo meritava di più, perché quelli della Rakuzan sono di un altro mondo e bla bla bla.

In realtà lo sappiamo tutti come funzionano gli shounen manga: il protagonista vince. A meno che non sia Light Yagami ma quella è un'altra storia. Io invece ho sempre molto amato anche questa partita contro la Rakuzan. Gli unici appunti potrei farli solo sulla caratterizzazione di Akashi ma, again, si torna a discutere dei problemi strutturali di una narrazione rigida come quella dello shounen manga (specialmente quello pubblicato su WSJ, sigh).

Quello che più amo di Fujimaki non è tanto che, persino mentre rileggo una partita che già conosco, riesca comunque a tenere la tensione altissima - e so come andrà a finire, figuriamoci. La più grande pecca di KuroBas è sicuramente la mancanza di verosimiglianza nel descrivere le partite di basket, perché ci sono questi personaggi quasi alieni che hanno mosse speciali, che ti ricordano un bankai di "Bleach" o un attacco ninja di "Naruto", si fanno scintille, c'è gente che poco poco vola e manca solo un asteroide che colpisca il campo.

E mi illumino di "Space Jam", insomma.

Il bello è che le partite diventino infinite anticamere per raccontare la vita e i pensieri dei giocatori fuori dal campo, le loro aspirazioni, i loro timori, la loro caratterizzazione - che per forza di cose sul campo si riduce alla volontà di vincere. Amo soprattutto che la Seirin sia una squadra all'80% costituita di persone normali e questo Fujimaki te lo ricordi, di tanto in tanto, anche con situazioni che hanno del comico, come lo showdown Furihata vs. Akashi.

Ed è bello, perché io sono rimasta una romantica ingenua inside e l'idea che l'impegno e il lavoro di squadra possano battere il talento naturale e i potenti inspodestabili mi affascina sempre moltissimo.

WARNING: MAY CONTAIN SPOILERS UP AHEAD!

Seirin vs Rakuzan is the most boring match in all of the manga i daresay. theres a spark of hope here and there, and then it goes back to being snoozeworthy again. i have to say that all of the morals that Kuroko and team Seirin try to push onto the masses is then counteracted by pure hypocrisy when they themselves see fit.

firstly they bang on and on endlessly about "Teamwork" and "Nakama", and yet when they realize that it'd be much easier to just throw the ball over to Kagami for the entire game they forget all about the values of friends and family alike. apparently Seirin wins because they are so team orientated and its just amazeballs how much trust they have in eachother, and yet when they abandon that plan and Murasakibara and Himuro start going for badassery teamplay its seems to be just not good enough. at that point Kagami is just so "Hayai!" etc and therefore no amount of teamplay was able to stop his bum. and likewise in the Kaijo match, where they tried to throw a plot twist into the game and make it that Kaijo was making super team-plays whilst Seirin was the opposite- even then they couldnt bare to just make Seirin lose and prove to the world that teamwork really will get you far. no, no, at that point it was all about self belief and hard work which will cut through the points. well how come that very theory never seems to work for team Shutoku? Midorima is the most damned hard-working man in the entire anime. he does absolutely everything humanly possible in his power to train and become the best basketball player, and yet when he goes one on one with Kagami who is never shown to be putting not nearly as much effort into training he magically loses and Taiga is simply too ferocious and "Hayai!" for the world. they try and bring things back down to earth by making Kagami have cramps and Teppei having a broken leg or whatever, but that never seems to stop them from jumping to the roof and winning matches. as long as you have self-belief and determination you can make it through. and yet the same principle doesnt seem to apply to young Murasakii who becomes disabled after moving for two minutes, therefore making him unable to throw the ball into the hoop. likewise unto Aomine, Kise, and every other character you can think of. these are just some of the few reasons why i'm starting to despise Seirin, a team who i initially loved. its because everything they bash others for is exactly what they are doing now. there is no real suspense in any matches anymore, because the magic of Kagami will soar through the heavens and allow them victory. when they win against Rakuzan and take the Winter Cup it wont be "YES!!! SEIRIN IS THE BEST TEAM IN JAPAN! WOOHOO!"- it shall indeed be more like "oh... Kagami took on all the generations of miracles... wow. team Kagami became the best in Japan." it does not feel like a team anymore or anything to be excited about- the upperclassman have no right to be happy or proud or have a feeling of accomplishment of their dreams because they don't really seem to have much involvement in the winning of games. i apologize for all of my ranting i am just really mad at the predictable turn of events Kuroko No Basket has taken these recent chapters. but i havent given up hope. after Rakuzan Vs Seirin i know it will only get better (hopefully). i have faith, afterall this is one of my fave manga's!

The lord is testing me and Seirin team.
This volume is like a fucking vampire that sucks all hopes leaving you with despair.
Come on Seirin! Your strength isn't just the 1st year duo or 2nd year's defence.
It is TEAM WORK! Get this in your head and make way for the miracle.

Kurtis Burkhardt says

Pretty decent manga series, finally started getting somewhat good about half way thru but there's just no story to this manga???

Gabriela says

UGh, cuando escuché de Hyuga siendo homofóbico me esperaba algo hard, no sé, que me hiciera odiarle. Pero joder, fue solo lo mismo que en el anime, odia a los hombres y mujeres que son femeninos. (Vale, aquí he visto el pequeño atisbo de que pueda ser gay. DEJENME SOÑAR) Pero admito que me molestó un poco por cómo se expreso.

Aún así, sigo diciendo que Jumpei x Reo es lo más canon de KNB xD

Waaa?? This volume isn't great at all! Even if this is the most important part of the story (almost the end) it lacks dinamism so it's kind of boring. I hope it gets better in the last 3 volumes!

Abeer Albossany says

The volume ended without finishing the match. However, I have already seen that. My only wish is that it will finish in the next volume. The whole thing was nicely done.
