This was an excellent Romantic Suspense novel. It was so interesting that I quickly picked up and read "The Rapids", "Cold Ridge" and "Dark Sky" by Carla Neggers. All four books involved related characters and so they kept me entertained. They also take you to adventurous places of interest such as the Neatherlands, Tennessee, New York, Hudson River Valley, New Hampshire and Vermont. I recommend this author to anyone who loves to read adventurous, suspense novels with a touch of romance. I really look forward to reading more novels by Carla Neggers.

U.S. Marshalls Rob Dunnemore and Nate Winter are shot by a sniper in Central Park. Rob is seriously injured. When his twin sister, Sarah, arrives in NYC Nate learns they are neighbors and friends of the President who comes from TN and that their parents are diplomats currently on a Commission in Amsterdam. Can the shooting have been intentional, related to their task force or their family connections? Nate intends to stick close to Sarah and dig deeper. Secrets in TN may be coming to the surface and associations from the past have hidden motives.

There are side characters that have reason to be involved but could be potential lead characters in future volumes. We get a glimpse of their backgrounds and personalities here. I liked the way we see things from varying perspectives and agendas and how they converge. Better than the first book. Looking forward to more in the series

Night's Landing was a quick read for all the right reasons: engrossing, exciting, and mysterious, which were all sustained from start to finish. A romantic suspense that is driven by appealing characters who are integral to the story. There are no bystanders or "wasted" moments; every event counts and is relevant to the plot.

The trigger moment occurs at the beginning with a sniper's bullet that targets two U.S. marshals. One of which happens to be a friend of the President. Is it a random act of violence? Or is it by design, and if so why? What starts off as a seemingly ordinary investigation for Deputy Nate Winter (one of the men shot at) becomes a much deeper mystery. His partner Deputy Rob Dunnemore is seriously injured in the attack and he takes it upon himself to look after Rob's twin sister, Sarah. A responsibility that takes on more seriousness when she receives a threatening letter. Soon, it becomes clear that the many "coincidences" of random events and meetings are part of a deliberate and deadly agenda of someone dangerous.

The urgency in the story never falters and neither did its appeal. Sarah Dunnemore may be historical archaeologist with a Ph.d whose occupation does not put her in daily risk, she is far from weak. Although she is unprepared for a threat on her life and her family, her intelligence becomes her strength that is evident during danger. She does not need saving or protection but becomes more of a partner to Nate. Quite different from Sarah, is Nate, an experienced U.S. marshal who is used to danger and used to rejecting relationships and romance because of it. He cannot see himself devoted to a relationship when much of his life deals with danger. Although his mutual attraction to Sarah exist from the moment they meet, he is unsure of how to proceed. Romance aside, the duty to protect is ingrained in him, which he has no trouble projecting on Sarah. As danger looms and the stakes rises, Sarah shows she is capable of protecting herself and Nate trusts her to do so. She earns his trust, his respect and his love.

There are other characters who are also appealing and are important to the story. Their presence are not only meaningful but are developed in such a way that an extension is natural and desired. As part of a series, after finishing one story you want to pick up another one to see where the characters are now.

The story was interesting from a combination of things: secrecy, a mystery, a past, and a prominent figure with ties to the Dunnemore family. What you get is a an enjoyable and engrossing read and I am anticipating more novels from this author.

NIGHT'S LANDING

Interesting romantic suspense thriller, second book I have read by Carla Neggers - good descriptive writing. I could have done with less on the snakes though.

Diane says

Awesome series! a well written series with interesting characters which was also very well developed (paperback!)

Joy says

Not one of Neggers's best efforts: the plot's a hot mess, with so many subplots that the central characters and their romance don't shine.

Great mystery - had a little too much romance for me but loved the mystery plot! The ending surprised me! I have read several of Carl Neggers' books. Will be reading more for sure!

Night's Landing by Carla Neggers is the second book in her U.S. Marshal series. In the opening scene, US Marshals Nate Winter and Rob Dunnemore are shot in Central Park. Nate's wound is slight, but Rob's is critical, so his twin sister rushes to his bedside. Rob, afraid that his sister is a target, sends her home. When she receives a threatening letter, Nate comes to her aid in Tennessee. Odd things begin to happen involving her gardener, a reporter, snakes, and the President who was raised on an adjacent property.

This is not one of Carla Neggers' best books, but the story is diverting and a quick read.
