I found this to be an awesome devotional to use as a prelude to Resurrection Day. It is an awesome privilege to walk with Jesus.

Got this as a Christmas gift from a mentor and read it for Lent. I really enjoyed it; it is a very well-written and encouraging devotional. I will be adding Jesus Calling to my daily devotion time because of this little book.

This book is very inspirational for your journey.

"Walk with Him along paths of peace. Enjoy the journey in His presence."

I did not enjoy the (first person written as if Jesus was talking style). It felt very contrived and sacrilegious. It needed editing. The grammatical issues were distracting from the message. Some points were interesting and caused me to think and look at scripture differently. I can understand and appreciate how this could be uplifting to some people in some circumstances. I did not find it to be so with me.

This seemed to be excerpts from her other books without much new material added. Still, it helped me in my mission to devote more time to spirituality, I would just recommend her other titles (Jesus Calling, etc.) over this one.

The Lenten devotional I chose for 2011. The writing was very powerful, yet comforting, and exactly what I specifically needed for this particular year.

I don't want to bait any partial-grace believers out there, but I had to quit on this one before I was all the way through it. Young's prose is beautiful and uplifting. In that, I have no problem, but there are some subtle qualities to this devotional that undermine God's perfect love. There are "if" statements here and there, sometimes as bracketed addendums or explanations of Scripture, which I find especially grievous. It has been a longstanding tradition in some circles to add things into Scripture when it seems like it would be difficult to understand otherwise, and what we tend to do is add a qualifier: "God will bless you IF YOU ARE PERFECTLY OBEDIENT". This is a paraphrase, but you've certainly seen this before, and usually, when you look into it, you find that the original Scripture merely says "God will bless you in Christ." His goodness, love, and grace do not flow from our works. They are an outpouring of His love as expressed through His Son, Jesus. If you trust in this idea, it blesses you way more than trying to merit your salvation through works (in fact, the latter just gets you into trouble).

The devotional is supposedly written from God's perspective, and it's all well and good until I got to a day midway through where God tells me that He knows I go through hard stuff sometimes, but that He uses that to teach me to obey Him better and that He won't quit on it till I do good stuff. Yes, that sounds simplistic, but that's what most people believe. Read your Bible, particularly Galatians. Recall the Spirit into which you were saved. You should not try to live according to the law, from which you were saved. Live by the Spirit and experience the good stuff that comes from already knowing you're righteous.

Used this for my Lenten devotionals this year. It could use a few more days, however, seeing as how I used this on the weekends, as well, so I will need to find something to supplement my devotional time for this last week of Lent!
