Sela Hagle says

Summary:

Explore the different types of dog heroes from service dogs to dogs that helped out during 9/11. Dive into interesting facts about dogs. Go on an reading adventure with the characters of the Magic Tree house to learn more about dogs and what they can do.

Evaluation:

This book is presented with easy to find information about different type of dog heroes. The style of the book is written to make readers interested and care about the subject they are reading about. For the integrity of the book, the author covers facts that helps support generalizations by explaining more in depth to explain the fact written. The book also has pictures and diagrams to help and extend information.

Teaching Idea:

students could use this book if they were researching about animals particularly a dog, and use facts they learned from the book to create a research project about dogs. This teaches students to cite what they are researching and how to pull information from books.

A book for kids who are just getting to the point of reading chapter books. Fun stories of dog heroes from Saint Bernards saving people from winter storms in the mountains to the hero search-and-rescue dogs of 911 and on a day to day basis in the wilderness.

Kinda surprised to see Balto here. I'd never heard of Balto until I was an adult and ran across him (literally his stuffed carcass) in a museum. Now he keeps popping up in these books. Is the story of Balto really that well known? At least this book spent a decent amount of time detailing the life and times of modern search and rescue dogs and service dogs. It's nice to know dogs are very much in need today and still have important jobs to do.

I am 100% sure I still have the "Ghost Hunters" book at my house.

Honestly though? Anyone who was my age in Elementary is just a liar if they say that these books were not their obsession at some point. I mean, come ON! They're the MAGIC TREE HOUSE books! Magic School Bus is just a ripoff, man. Magic Tree House is the ORIGINAL. And we all LOVE IT.

- o Summary: This book is a sequel to a previous book that is about dogs named Jack and Annie. Jack and Annie are St. Bernards that help in many natural disasters in the book previous to this. This book answers a lot of the questions that were asked about these two hero dogs. This book is full of fun facts and photographs that kids will love!
- o Grade level: fourth
- o Appropriate classroom use: This would be a fun book just for kids to look at or read during their free time. I do not know where this book would fit into any curriculum.
- o Individual students who might benefit from reading: Students that are interested in Dogs or nonfiction books
- o Small group use: This would be a fun book for a few students to read and look at the pictures together during reading time.
- o Whole class use: I would not use this for whole class use because it is a long book that doesn't tie into the curriculum if I had to guess. I would have it in my classroom library though.
- o Related books in genre/subject or content area: Max: Best Friend. Hero. Marine.
- o Multimedia connections available: There are websites about other actual dog heroes that students might be interested in

The authors give a great deal of information on dogs and how they are heroes in a very short book. It also has a place in the back showing other books to read and other places to search for information on dogs.

Debby Baumgartner says

Nonfiction companion to Magic Tree House book, Dogs in the Dead of Night. Good facts about dogs.

Kim says

Really liked the way they talk about how to do research, apart from the information on the dog heroes profiled in the book. Nice little pocket history.

Agnes Budianto says

From this book, I have come to know that dogs are not just for pets, they can be heroes in their own ways.

Shaylee Marshall says

This book is awesome if you want to learn all about how several types of dogs have became heroes throughout history! You are able to view a variety of different stories in this book. I really enjoyed the layout and how they also added in real pictures of the dogs in each situation!

Jessica Miller says

This book is a nonfiction companion book to Magic Tree House #46: Dogs in the Dead of Night. This book is full of facts about dogs and the amazing things they are capable of. The chapters discuss topics such as hero dogs, search and rescue dogs, service dogs, the way dogs think and more. This book provides a lot of information that is easy for students to understand and comprehend. Along with all the facts about dogs, the author includes many stories of real hero dogs that rescued people on 9/11, helped with earthquake relief in Haiti, and act as heroes every day by helping their owners survive. One amazing thing that the book discussed was R.E.A.D. dogs. R.E.A.D. dogs are special dogs trained to sit with children as they read. They are trained to look at the reader and even turn the book pages. Many children have said that when they are reading with R.E.A.D. dogs they are able to relax because they don't feel shy or scared of being made fun of if they make a mistake. Working with R.E.A.D. dogs has helped many children improve their reading grades. This book covers everything about dogs and how they are true heroes in many different ways. I really enjoyed reading this because I love dogs and the impact they make on people every single day. This book is a fun and easy read and children would love to learn about dogs in this way.

This book would be great for students in grades 3-5. Many students love The Magic Tree House series. These books are great whether you have them in your class library for the students to explore on their own or use them as a read aloud. After grabbing the students' attention with the Dogs in the Dead of Night, introduce this companion nonfiction text to them! This is a great nonfiction book to bring into the classroom that the students will sure to be interested in. You can use this book as a gateway into other events that happened in history too. This book can get you started on talking about 9/11, the earthquake in Haiti, or even World War II. In this book, there are numerous stories about dogs being a big part of major events in our history. It provides so many opportunities to have class discussions about many other things from history. Overall, this is a great book to include in the classroom!
