A fun take on a classic song. I'm going to try this one with my toddlers...I think the interaction will be fun. Jane Cabrera's illustrations are wonderful!

This was a favorite for all three of us!

The girls love it when I sing the verses to them; and, then they get to give the animal sounds!

Along the way, I ask questions and the girls love to be able to interact with the story!

Wonderful illustrations and imaginative fun make this a real keeper!

1. None.
2. Pre k- Kindergarten.
3. A kitten and a puppy paddle down a rainforest river. Along the way they are surprised by animals that live in the rainforest.
4. Creative version of the classic rhyme. Gets students interactive while reading and sometimes active. It's repetitiveness makes it even more enjoyable because you know what's coming next.
5. Create small water boats using pool noodles and watch them float, read an informational text about the rainforest.

So fun! My kiddos loved having different verses.

More verses to sing to the tune of row row row your boat. Swimming mice, growling tigers, and snapping crocodiles populate this stream this cat and dog are rowing down. Cute illustrations. They end up with a dog mom and I wonder about the cat in the boat: are they adopted? Sleeping over with the dog family? A runaway? This is never explained and I spend too much time thinking about the family dynamics in children's books.

You'll be making all kinds of noises as you encounter wildlife such as mice, a monkey, an elephant, a crocodile, a lion, a tiger, some doves, and finally a mommy dog while rowing up a JUNGLE stream. At sunset you'll be rowing wearily, wearily, wearily, wearily -- snuggle up and dream.

My 2 year old has loved this book since he was a year old. We have tried others by Ms. Cabrera, but he is addicted to this book. Fortunately, this is a library book, so I can take a break from it every once in awhile. The pictures are delightful and the story is classic with a creative spin! I would buy it but I just don't have the time to read it all day long.

***UPDATE***

We have read this way more than two times. Each time we check it out, it is read at least 5 times. :-)

This was the perfect book for our baby story time. I paper-clipped a few animals to cut down on the length slightly, but the kids and parents followed along, and most of the babies ended up hanging onto my knees while I sang. They loved making the animal sounds at the end of each verse.

Several new verses of the song featuring different animals will help this song stretch allllll the way through bathtime. Berry was a fan. :)

Read for Boats and Planes themed storytime 9/25/2018 - we made all of the animal sounds after each verse. The kids really liked this one.

I used this recently for a toddler storytime. The children were definitely captivated by the illustrations - the large, bold colors and pictures make this stand out in a crowd. The book follows a familiar song, so it's one you can sing as you read. I look forward to checking out more of Jane Cabrera's work, since I know she has a number of similar song-based, colorful books that work well for storytime, as well as general kid appeal.
