Anila Arpan says

The delights and anguishes of love sweetly captured, it perfectly blends the highs and lows that Life never fails to test us with... a timeless story of perseverance and optimism written.

During a recent trip to New Orleans, I found a copy of this book by an author that friends had read as teenagers...Mrs. Keyes was from New England, but lived in New Orleans for many years after the war. She was a prolific writer and this was one of her first novels, written in 1919...it was an interesting read just for the language and social mores that were prevalent at the time...one of the more interesting story lines was about an unplanned pregnancy, but the word "pregnant" was never used and the reader still knew exactly what was being discussed! Another term was "make love to", in this case though, it referred to courting, not the deed...many of the characters experienced cathartic moments and the detail of their thoughts and emotions made the story move along quickly. I also read a bio of Mrs. Keyes and found her writing an interesting juxtaposition with her attitudes as described in the bio...maybe it wasn't a very perceptive biography...but it was a fun read and interesting to know what "chick lit" was like in 1919!!

I think this one one of the most beautiful books I've ever read, such an amazing classic, shows what a Godly relationship is really suppose to be like, between friends & lovers.

An old fashioned story told with charm. I am fond of novels written with some innocence, yet tells about struggles of morality and hard situations without going into details that are harsh and violent. Reading this book is like watching a 1940's movie. I love old movies and old books of this type. It is difficult sometimes to read about the roles of men and women that were in a less enlightened (ha) age.
