Nice diversion from a recent slog through zombie country

Alright short stories. None really stood out to me or really got me involved enough. They weren't bad, worth checking out for anyone who hasn't read Jeremy Shipp before.

Cats of Ulthar February Weird Fiction says

I can't think of any other author who can convey an entire story line in the very first sentence-and hook the reader so incredibly powerfully that we could not jerk away and leave the story if we wanted to. And of course, with Jeremy C. Shipp steering this fishing boat, no reader wants to jump overboard (not to mention there may be clown sharks in them thar' waters). I personally think every reader should drop what they're doing (unless of course, that's driving, bathing a toddler, or operating heavy equipment) and race to his or her nearest bookselling outlet and snatch up everything this man writes. Everything-leave no stone unturned.

Maybe it's not appropriate (or sane) to laugh at a horror story, but I chortled throughout the entirety of "A Quivering Gray Fog." Very few authors can manage this delectable combination of horror and totally warped humour. There are four powerful stories in this collection, for me especially "A Quivering Gray Fog" and "Little Mouse." Believe me, I'm going to be carrying those characters down into my dreams tonight!

But Gentle Reader, you don't have to take my word for it: get this volume, plus Volumes 1, 2, 4, or buy the Complete Collection. Believe me, you won't regret it (except when the nightmares come) and you may even find yourself lining them up for a reread.

These are all short stories, 4 in all, that deal with clowns. There were really only a couple of them that made sense to me. And it is my philosophy with short stories that if you are not grabbed by the first paragraph, the story is lost.
