Review Feb 2012:

I started reading this series after a friend sent me a copy of one of the comics. I love the diversity of the characters and watching them interact. So many of the comics made me laugh out loud and they always leave me wanting to read more.

Sara says

It started off as a boredom thing at work, a distraction, but it is hilariously written and extremely smart and so addicting. I couldn't get enough, and over the course of a few weeks I read the entire series!

Sarah says

The story continues to engage. I really like the relationships and interactions between different characters. It's subtle but you can really see a difference in the drawing style when compared to the earlier strips.

Sara says

Danielle does a great job of establishing interesting relationships between her characters that really just make you want to keep on reading and laughing.

Far better than two previous volumes. As it often is with web comics, this also goes through a lot of development with author. It is remarkable, how ready-to-publish even the very first strips were, but to me after first 400 strips the story telling does also became more professional. For some reason it seemed to took some time to get major characters properly introduced.

I really liked the story arc about Jamie's starting relationship. Although Hazel has a bunch of revelations of herself, there is a lot to be annoyed about her character: Jamie's more honest to herself and others of her faults. Clarice, Maureen and Jameson had much more to their personalities as well. To be fair, there is a quit a time gap between release of the very first strip and the 600th, but it took a time to deliver a comic that I start actually to like at some level.

Started reading this webcomic in 2014. I like it and sometimes like it a lot, but some characters and story lines are... well, "a bit too much". I mean, the talking cactus who searches for his mustache that has run away, various extra-ordinary cats and kitties,...

Rainey says

Still in love with this comic.
