2017? WTF is that?

Paula Stokes says

EDITED: This book is officially on hold and has been replaced with a different title for my Harper 2017 contemp. More info soon on that book. I moved the publication date for this one to 2019 because GR doesn't let you delete books once they're listed and I haven't totally given up on the manuscript.

What happened is that halfway through drafting, I hit a wall with the plot and main character. I tried everything to get past it, brainstorming, re-outlining, signing up for a writing class, working on other stuff, etc. But the only outcome was that all of my other ideas felt more compelling and more workable. So after writing 45,000 words, I set this book aside and started over with a brand new concept.

I hope that the low ratings this book has received from people who haven't read it aren't because you are upset with me for having to put the story on hold. I really wanted to bring the magical setting of Copenhagen to the page, but sometimes you start writing a book and it works and then you keep writing it and it quits working. I'm hopeful I'll be able to salvage this one in the future :)

For some reason, I really like Paula Stoke's naming of her books. It's so interesting :D

(is this going to be about a boy named Jack)
