Anna Dalhaimer Bartkowski says

I met Carolyn in Leader, Saskatchewan this summer and purchased her book after hearing her talk at the Leader German Russian Festival. Her book covers all of the details needed to visit your ancestral town. Simple, good advice is combined with smart research discussion throughout the book. Carolyn has tied everything a genealogist needs into one, great book.

This book was part of a free handout packet at a story teller/writer's and family history researcher's convention. It could be very helpful to someone preparing to travel the world to research family history. I found it interesting to learn a little bit more about the author's german cultural heritage as it existed in Eastern Europe and in Ukraine. Our family and cultural relationships can be stronger and are in reality more lasting than international boarders.

Kalyan Panja says

The whole show is built on the different reactions, stigmatized by recurring phrases. The axioms are set and at the same time fought in a unique time that makes simultaneous actions and phrases distant in time. Everything comes back and shows the circularity of the ancestral town, to the past and the injustices that are asking to be healed.

The spirit of the book pulsates and takes the form of an ensemble drama from the end face to hope. The book is not a refuge for the soul weary of the future, but a book to get nourishment and energy in life, to live in the fullness of the present and a lively expectation of the future.
